SUBJECT DESCRIPTION

As for international relations academics, developing knowledge and ingenious perspective on Indonesian social and political studies are as equally important as understanding international politics. This course is designed to introduce the historical process of nation building and state building in Indonesia to the International Relations students. The lectures will also cover the current Indonesian social and political development. The lectures will be developed through these guiding questions:

- 1. What are the continuities and changes that we could learn throughout Indonesian history?
- 2. What is the significance of those continuities and changes to the contemporary Indonesian situation?

	SUBJECT INTENDED LEARNING OUTCOMES
Upon su	ccessful completion of this subject, students should be able to:
1	The students could describe and explain historical development of nation building and state building in Indonesia (A1).
2	Students are able to analyse the influential factors shaping the process of nation building and state building of Indonesia encompassing the study on pre-independence era through contemporary era (B1).

3	Students are able to define and explain the importance of past events in correlation with the discussed topics and its relevance to the contemporary Indonesian social and political situation (B2, C2).
4	Students could present their analysis on the studies of Indonesian plurality, political ideologies, contemporary ideologies, authoritarianism and democracy, social movements, civil society and representation politics (B1, C3).

	CLASS REGULATION
Student sh	hould obey the class regulations, as listed below:
1	Students should fulfill the class requirement imposed by the faculty. In order to be eligible for mid-term and end of term examinations, student should attend minimum 75% of class meetings. Failed to do so, students would not be able to get maximum points.
